Course Development

University of the Fraser Valley, Department of Psychology
 Heuristics, Biases, and Critical Thinking – Developed with Sven van de Wetering, Ph.D.

This course takes an unusual perspective on critical thinking. While traditional critical thinking courses focus on the analysis of evidence and arguments, this course focuses on the person doing the evaluation of evidence and arguments. There is a huge literature pointing to biases in the way we interpret ambiguous information, and a smaller but still fairly convincing body of literature pointing to the tendency for people highly trained in conventional critical thinking skills to use those skills selectively to reinforce their own prejudices. This course acquaints students with this literature and points the way toward a new set of critical thinking skills based on overcoming these biases.
